AUDIO HIGHLIGHTS

With their album Karakoram Highway playing onboard, we caught up with some members of the Malaysian fusion band, AkashA.

How did all of you meet?

Jamie Wilson, Guitarist, Composer and Musical Director: All of us met having collaborated on various musical projects across many different genres over the last few years. We were approached to form a collective for a single performance at the Rainforest World Music Festival in Sarawak in 2008. We all had such a great time that we went from strength to strength and never looked back. We have been bringing our Malaysian world music to the world ever since.

Kumar Karthigesu, Sitarist and Manager: I have worked with Jamie on independent shows for some years now, and have also recorded at Greg's studio in the past. I have literally grown up with Vick (Ramakrishnan, who plays the Tabla) and studied with him in India too.

Greg Henderson, Bassist and Sound Engineer: I met Jamie very briefly when he was a young guitar wizard playing the traps around Sydney in the 1980s. I met him properly in 1997 when he was playing session guitar on an album I produced for Ella. When Akasha formed in 2008, Jamie called up to see if I wanted to play bass, and I did.

Who writes the music?

JW: I compose all the music for AkashA but each member contributes enormously during the recording process. I always have a clear idea of each piece of music but as each member adds his musical flavour, the result is always more colourful than I had imagined! I try to combine Malaysian with Western and Asian elements, with a strong Indian influence brought on by the Sitar and Tabla.

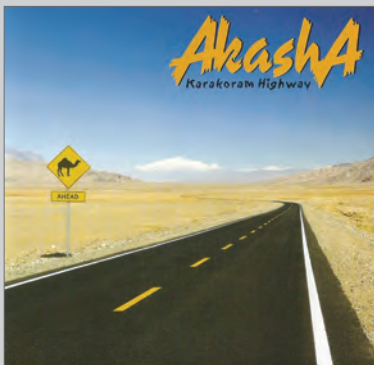

KK: I think, initially, we assumed that each of us could compose and write something for the band, but it quickly became obvious that this area was Jamie's forte. The way he weaves in Western and Eastern themes using complicated material and yet, making them sound simple and catchy, is amazing.

GH: Jamie has an astonishing gift for writing melody and arranging music. It's near impossible for the rest of us to compete with that kind of inspiration!

Who are your musical heroes?

JW: For me, my influences were naturally guitarists. I grew up with Santana, Clapton and Pink Floyd floating around the house thanks to my parents. As I discovered world music, I listened to Ravi Shankar and Shakti, the usual maestros, but I am far from an authority on world music.

KK: Coming from a traditional Indian household, I was drawn to Indian musical contemporaries like Ravi Shankar, V. Balsara and Timir Baran from very early on. As I was deciding to pursue playing the Sitar as a career, my heroes were young geniuses like Shujaat Khan and Niladri Kumar. As I delved deeper, I realised that most musical styles fascinate me. GH: My musical heroes don't have much to do with World Music, and my influences have little bearing on the sound of AkashA. I'm from a rock 'n' roll background, and my inspirations were the Beatles, Pink Floyd, and Led Zeppelin, and have only just discovered world fusion through AkashA.

What can we expect next from AkashA?

JW: We are currently working on our third album, which is sounding great. I am very excited to hear it when it's completed. The album has been delayed a little as I am currently touring with Hong Kong superstar Jacky Cheung. As we say it here in Malaysia, we all have to cari makan! But we will get there!

KK: We have travelled to 12 countries and performed in many music festivals and more than 200 concerts. This third album will be great to spur a fresh concert tour and allow us to share our music with more people around the world.

GH: 2018 is going to be our 10th anniversary and our 'relaunch' year. We're currently in talks with a promoter to do some big shows in the second half of 2018 to coincide with the release of our third album. The new album is fully written and recording has commenced but it's a slow process as we're strewn all over the world at this point in time. The new pieces are amazing, drawing on a wide variety of influences from Qawwali music, Turkish rhythms, Blues, and even The Who!

Do you have a message for your fans?

JW: To our awesome fans, hang in there! We will be back better than ever soon, with a great new album and some more shows to celebrate our 10th anniversary as a group. Thanks to all for their support!

KK: A heartfelt thank you to all of you for the love, and for appreciating music that transcends all boundaries. We promise to bring you more exciting music, albums and concerts in the near future.

GH: We're grateful for all their cheers and their love. We'll be back very soon.
