Award-winning Malaysian singer NJWA's self-titled third EP is playing onboard this month. We caught up with the singer for a quick chat.

How old were you when you first got into music?

I took my first piano lesson at the age of three, and vocal lessons at the age of nine, so music has been a part of me since I was very young. I did my first show as a singer-songwriter at the age of 19 and I haven't looked back since.

You graduated from the Berklee College of Music in Boston, Massachusetts, and moved to New York after graduation. How different is the music industry in the U.S. compared to Malaysia?

The music that is being made there is really forward. Everyone is trying to create a new sound that is unique. There is also so much talent and everyone is gunning for the same thing, so you have to work really hard in order to stand out.

Both your image and your sound are notably different now compared to your early days. What prompted this change?

Being a student at Berklee really opened my ears to different styles of music. Although my initial love was for R&B and Jazz, I also realised that all the musicians I met at Berklee who came from various backgrounds drew from their culture, and that's what makes their sound unique. This prompted me to experiment more with my sound, thus the birth of this blend of R&B and Southeast Asian music. Image-wise, I was truly inspired by the minimalist and edgy styles of New Yorkers, which then evolved into my own style that represents who I am today.

Where do you draw your musical inspiration from?

From life experiences (and) my surroundings. Listening to different genres of music from different eras has also inspired me musically.

Which musician or artist would you most like to work with, and why?

At the moment, I would really like to work with Moses Sumney. His sound is full of lush vocal layerings and it's so ethereal. I would love to see what we would come up with if I included my traditional asli singing with his music.

The Kids Are Alright - CHLOE X HALLE

At just 17 and 19 years old, Chloe and Halle Bailey have come a long way from the days of recording songs in their living room. The sisters are endorsed by their idol Beyoncé who signed them to her record label. Their debut R&B album features 14 songs including Grown, the track that serves as the theme song for the American TV sitcom series Grown-ish.
