

A STAR IS BORN

WANT HELP WITH WHAT TO WATCH THIS MONTH? FILMMAKER AND DIRECTOR KAM RASLAN MAKES THE CASE FOR THESE MOVIES.

↑ WIDOWS

This is an almost unbearably tense movie but sticking with it has its reward. A heist goes fatally wrong in the opening minutes in a scene that could be the end of a movie. But instead, it is now left to the widows of the fallen professional robbers to pick up the pieces of their broken lives, to save themselves and discover who they are by executing their own heist.

Widows is only the third movie made by the British film director Steve McQueen, but with it, he proves that his success with 12 Years a Slave was no fluke. In both movies, he builds tension through a constant atmosphere of menace where violence is sudden, almost casual and finished in the blink of an eye. Instead of lingering sadistically on scenes of violence, McQueen chooses to highlight the effect it has on his characters. His characters exist in a position of weakness and he wants to know what they will do to save themselves. I don't want to give anything away, but in Widows, the women have to delve deep.

Widows is a very clever resurrection of a British TV mini-series from the 1980s that was written by Lynda La Plante, who has specialised in putting women at the centre of stories of crime and law enforcement, traditional male bastions. With the movie, McQueen has stayed true to La Plante's vision that a strong female character isn't simply a female version of a man. The women still need to find babysitters, they enjoy looking pretty (and judge each other for it) and they don't want to be poor or to die. And then McQueen adds extra layers of political corruption and issues of race. For McQueen, anybody can be a villain, be they a man or a woman, young or old, black or white.

If you haven't guessed it already, I really liked this movie and I already can't wait to see what McQueen does next. Widows is one of the best movies I have seen in a long time.

↑ CREED

With Creed, the old Rocky franchise gets a triumphant new lease of life with an inspired reworking.

Kids, ask your grandparents who Rocky was. They'll probably start singing some confused tune with words like "the eye of the tiger...", they'll look like they're running on the spot (or is it slow-motion?), and then, they'll punch the air, and you'll think, oh no, grandpa's having a stroke. But don't worry, kids. Grandpa is remembering the ultimate triumph against the odds and some of the best montage scenes in cinema history. Grandpa, who normally hates the sport of boxing, is remembering the heavyweight boxer Rocky Balboa and his nemesis turned best friend, Apollo Creed, who died in Rocky's arms in one of the sequels.

In the vaults of the Hollywood studios are thousands of movies that were smash hits back in their day. Whenever box-office times are tough (when TV arrived in the 1950s or now with internet streaming services like Netflix), it's understandable for movie executives to think, well, these movies were once smash hits, why not just do a remake? And that's why we get an unasked-for remake of Ben Hur. It was a hit in the silent era, the epic Technicolor remake was a hit in the 1950s, but the recent remake was a huge flop.

But surely Rocky could be a smash hit again? That underdog story is an evergreen. The 1976 original had an astonishing performance by Sylvester Stallone as a down-on-his-luck ex-boxer who gets one last chance at the big time with a boxing match against the World Heavyweight Champion, Apollo Creed. Nobody, including himself, believes he can do it, but through hard work and montage scenes, he loses, but really he wins. With a budget of USD1 million, it made USD225 million, won the Best Picture Oscar and spawned an unprecedented 103 sequels (actually, it was seven). Let's do a remake of Rocky!

It could have been a disaster with the new young audience that knows nothing of Rocky's past glories. Instead, Creed is a triumph because it is not just a lame remake but an absolutely inspired reworking. Creed is the story of Apollo Creed's son (the superb Michael B. Jordan), who has his own bitter dreams of boxing success, and he turns to an aging Rocky Balboa to help him train. With friction between young and old, Adonis Creed finds an unlikely father figure he never had.

Creed is such an intelligent way to rework a once-successful movie franchise. Grandpa can happily keep his warm memories of Rocky and a young audience can enjoy a movie that feels entirely new.

Formed in 2014 in Kuching, Sarawak, world music band At Adau is a household name at music festivals locally and around the world. Comprising Ezra Tekola, Jackson Lian Ngau, Meldrick Bob Udos, Alfonso McKenzie, Ju Hyun Lee, and Cedric Riseng, the band sits down with Going Places to share what they've been up to.

How did you all meet?

Lian (Jackson Lian Ngau) and I (Meldrick Bob Udos) go way back. We were friends since school days, playing in multiple bands and gigs before this. One day, Lian came up to me and proposed we start our own band. I agreed, and the hunt for the other four members began. It took us a bit of time to find the right ones, but we did it. First, we recruited Ezra. This was somewhat easy because we were friends and Lian's father and Ezra's father were buddies. From Ezra, we recruited Cedric. He was our first bassist. Subsequently, we felt something was still not right. Then, Luke was suggested to Lian and we liked the way he played. Fonso (Alfonso) was the last to join us.

How did Juju (Ju Hyun Lee, the only female band member, is from South Korea) end up in Sarawak and in this band?

Juju went to the Rainforest World Music Festival in 2013 and fell in love with Sarawak, especially the culture and the music. She was interested to learn more about our traditional music, so we asked her to join the band. She moved to Sarawak with her family so that she could concentrate on the band. But she's now back in her hometown and we're missing her. We hope we can jam with her again.

Growing up, who are some of the musicians who have inspired you to become musicians yourself?

That would be the one and only Sarawak Sape Master Mr Mathew Ngau Jau, who is a living national heritage of Malaysia. His love and passion for the Sape and his love of sharing music with others have greatly influenced us. Master Perutong player Arthur Borman (Baicas) is another great inspiration. His love for tradition and how passionately he gives and shares his music with others have impacted us all. Inspired by their music, we blend the Sape with other instruments to produce our own music. Dewa Budjana and Gusteja, both of Indonesia, Tuku Kame of Malaysia, and Sung Pau of Taiwan are the other musicians we look up to.

You describe your work as music that heals. Can you elaborate on that?

According to stories told by our forefathers back in the days, Sape was not only a musical instrument that entertains listeners, but it also acts as an instrument to heal the sick. So, we incorporated soft, soothing Sape sounds in our first album, Journey. We hope that those calming sounds can help our listeners to destress and relax, regardless of the trials they're facing. We also wrote pieces that are suitable for festivals to bring out positive vibes and to revive the soul.

Has the fan base for world music increased, say, from five years ago?

The numbers are gradually growing, and this somehow justifies that world music will soon be on par with commercial music. World music doesn't discriminate. It does not know gender, colour or politics. It promotes happiness, culture, tradition and the origins of the country. It doesn't divide the people. Instead, world music brings people together because of the similarities that can be found in sounds or how one plays certain instruments. You will be surprised.

Name one of the most memorable events in your musical journey so far.

The best experience we have had so far was in Korea, where we toured for two weeks. It was out of this world! We had the opportunity to share our culture and traditions in schools and in festivals in Korea. This trip drove us to do better and to dream bigger to travel further to not only promote our music but to promote our home, Sarawak.

Who are some of the musicians, local and international, that you hope to work with in the future?

Honestly, we have not thought about any collaborations, neither with a local nor an international band. This is because we are still building our band's standing in our hometown, but also, we are focusing on searching deeply into At Adau's sound. We would be ecstatic to be able to collaborate one day with local and international bands. It will be cool to see instruments from Borneo together with other instruments from other parts of the world, jiving and promoting love and peace on the same track.

What is your greatest inspiration?

Our inspiration comes from our different ethnic roots, from our vast multicultural people, from our rich authentic sounds, to the beautiful curves and lines of our own people and our brothers and sisters.

Where can fans catch your next performance?

We are in the midst of securing slots for a few upcoming festivals but nothing concrete yet. But it is safe to say that in 2019, we will be performing a lot outside of our hometown, like in India, Taiwan, Thailand, New Zealand, Indonesia and hopefully, Europe.

What can we expect from At Adau this year?

This will be a big year for us. We are releasing our second album, called Oba. This album is very much different compared to our first album. In Oba, we experimented more with Sape, together with various percussion instruments from our multicultural ethnic groups all around Borneo. We want to prove that Sape can be energetic. It can be unique and at the same time, be current as well. Trust us when we say the album will blow your mind! You can get the album at selected outlets in Kuching such as Sape Galeri, Riverside, Museum Cafe and Blackout Tattoo Studio. You can also listen to it and our first album on Spotify. Or you can take a listen now – onboard – on your flight!

Oba is playing onboard this month under the World music genre. Check your in-flight entertainment system for channel information
